Cleveland and Hendricks have the State on the votes as east and returned. They have now taken another tack, and propose to carry this State after election if they can. For this purpose they are gathering together political lawyers and election manipulators. Their scheme is to Floridaize New York by counties and to induce Republican boards of supervisors to throw out votes on the ground of pretended irregularities.

The presidency of the United States is not to be decided upon one-sided allegations of mere elerical errors. Neither the vote of New York State nor any of its counties and be Floridazed. The attempt now being made to do this at the direct unstigation of Mr. Blaine and under his direction only serves to intensify the determination of the people that the President who has been elected shall be seated."

Blaine Attempting Revolution.
[New York Herald.]
On Wednesday and Thursday last, the two days following the election, the Blaine voters were cautiously told by the Blaine managers that they "believed" they had carried New York. They did not venture to "claim" the State, but they "had hopes."

That was not upnatural. The returns came in slowly, and the Blaine "estimates"—based on the presumed effectiveness of a vast corruption fund raised at the Gould-Blaine dinner and in the Union League Club in the last week of the canvass for immediate use—were all, of course, in their own favor. But the actual returns as they came in proved those "estimates" wrong. What happened!

By Friday morning the returns were in, and two men who more than all others in this country have the babit of getting the carriest correct news of all important matters and the facilities for retting it—these two men, Jay Gould and William H. Vanderbilt, had got the correct news, and hastened to congratulate President-elect Cleveland. Mr. Gould was the carliest, for he telegraphed President Cleveland his congratulations. Mr. Vanderbilt, more deliberate, wrote the President-elect, and wrote him an admirable letter, too.

On the same day, Friday—we wish our readers to note the Av., the Powither.

"I am advised there have been frauds in New York State, I believe that the honest vote of the State gives a Republican plurality, and I ask the committee to see that we have a fair and honest count."

It is all I, I, I. Blaine had been notified by the committee that the State had gone Democratic; he was not sure that he could slir them up to support his Mexicanizing policy, and so, though Mr. Gould and Mr. Vanderbill, the two men most sure to have correct news, were convinced; though the Albany Evening Journal, his vigorous supporter, had written that "fo-day, when the efficial returns remove all doubt," the Journal "frankly acknowledges defeat;" though the state was for Cleveland, his or frankly acknowledges defeat; "I believe there are been frauds in the bear of their appreausing the fallen a rash visitor who had ventured to whistle the tune before the extreme violence of the extreme violence of the extreme violence the extreme violence of the extreme violence of the extreme violence the extreme violence of the violence

The people of New York and of the nation can afford to await with perfect caimness the disastrous failure of this iniquitious aftempt to slead the presidency; but the enterprise is, all the same, a very dangerous one for those engaged in it.

Mr. William C. Whitney does not overstate the case when he declares that "any attempt to control the election by prostituting the constituted authorities to factional uses will be indiguantly resisted by the people of New York as revolutionary and incendiary.

The Riaine Conspirators.
[New York Times.]

Mr. Biaine would no doubt be quite willing to take by theft and fraud that great office which the voters of the United States have decreed that he shall not have, and nothing but fear will deter the precious set of conspirators in this city who are easting about for some means of setting aside the verdiet of the ballott from attempting to carry out their evil purposes. But their growing timidity is shown by the changed tone of their pronunciamentos.

They now profess to seek only the ascertainment of the true result of the vote, and their newspaper organs give visible proof of increasing prudence and waning hope in the balanced and cautious tone of their remarks. The fact remains, however, that the National Committee's statement, on their helpf, wither Mr. Bialne, by a pay. remarks. The fact remains, however, that the National Committee's statement, on their belief, "that Mr. Bilane has a plurality of several hundred votes" in this State, is so grossly and palpably false that the public safety demands that they be watched just as burglars would be watched who had been overheard declaring their intention to "crack" a bank.

[Phiadelphia Time-.]

Because a their of the presidency was successfully executed in 1876 and popular submission enforced, it is assumed by some of the pupils of the electoral burglars of that day that a like theft of the presidency can be executed in 1884. It won't win—don't try.

have been well informed by the universal popular command to commit no wrong; submit to none. It won't win—don't try.

The party sympathy the Republican candidates and leaders might have had in an honest, exhaustive scrutiny of the vote of New York has not only perished, but distrust and contempt have been provoked by the undignified and indecent wall from Mr. Blaine and the naked falsehoods and evident appeal to fraud which come from Mr. Blaine's committee. There is now no moral or even partisan support in prolonging a practically concluded contest. It won't win; don't try!

The Cat as a Musical Critic.

1 From Leisure Hour.

1 Latetly, writes a clergyman in the south of Ireland, in visiting a medical friend, had the opportunity of witnessing the strange effects of a certain kind of music upon a cat. Pussy was sporting with her young kittens on the rug when her master drew my attention to hor, saying that there was an air in Verdi's "Il Troystore" which she detected, and would not allow to be whistled within her hearing.

Upon my expressing my surprise, and begging for an illustration of the truth of the conductor in the opposite side of the conductor, who stepped out on the platform, came near being killed. One bullet passed through a sieeping-car window over the heads of two ladies, and was flattened on the opposite side of the care.

We want you. We're got you.' Quick as lightning I saw our predicament, and decided what to do. I told them 'All right, don't shoot,' and then to the fireman, 'Drop down.' I gave the throttle a jerk wide open and dropped down myself. As I jerked they fired into the eab. I didn't know whether we should jump the track or not, but I wasn't going to have my passengers robbed. The obstruction damaged the cow-catcher considerably. I saw three men on my right, two on my left, and one on horseback.'

The passengers, after realizing the great danger through which they had massed, and the daring but splendid presence of mind and the bravery and decision of the heroic engineer, made up a purse and presented it to him as a token of their appreciation, and nearly all thanked him personally for risking his own life to save his passengers from robbery. It was a splendid act, and James Skuse will go down to history as a real hero.

Starving Out the Snake.

An Elmira special says: Mrs. E. M. Estabrook, wife of a prominent citizen of Olean, has been ill for several months, and the cause of her sickness could not be determined by the physicians who were consulted in her case. A fortnight ago she called in a man named Alfred Gillett, who styles himself a clairvoyant physician, and claims to act in diseases through direct communication with spirits. He informed Mrs. Estabrook that she had swellowed a snake three years ago, and that it had grown to large dimensions in her stomach and was the cause of her illness. He said the only way she could be cured was for her to neither eat nor drink anything until the snake, becoming hungry and thirsty, crawled from her mouth in search of nourishment, which it would noted to.
